

Drama time with vegetables

Drama is a great way for kids to express emotions, build their confidence and have fun all at once! Get the creative juices flowing with a vegetable puppet theatre or challenge the kids to develop their own vegetable and fruit advertisement.

- Vegetable puppet theatre. This could be finger puppet or shadow puppet theatre show or a live theatre show. First, imagine and develop your vegetable and fruit characters. Then write a script.
- Filming your own advertisement. Ask your child to choose a vegetable, fruit or water that they would like to develop an advertisement for. Get them to do some research on their chosen item and develop a script or story board to promote their product. They can create a brand name, logo, slogan and jingle if they wish. Once they're ready the next step is to film, this can be via phone or camera or can be 'filmed' via a home made video camera (tissue box and paper towel roll)

Supported by

